A woman with blonde hair, wearing a light-colored short-sleeved button-down shirt, is leaning forward and reaching out towards a chimpanzee. The chimpanzee is sitting and looking at the woman's hand. The background is a blurred green forest. The text "habituatation– proceeding openly and allowing animals to get accustomed to her." is overlaid on the right side of the image.

Mentorship.

One shouldn't forget that Jane had no scientific background.

Louis Leaky

- Louis Leaky
- repeatedly found funding for Jane
 - advised and educated her
 - handled logistics
 - gave her his contacts

Cambridge

Hugo van Lawick

George Schaller, a trained scientist, helped Jane understand what to look for.

Do chimpanzees eat meat?

Do chimpanzees use tools?

Robert Hinde

David Hinde

‘women frequently break down into tears’

David Hinde

- taught Jane the language of ethology
- introduced her to standardized check
- got her to add rigor to her narrative
- sent her graduate students to help

David Hamburg helped Jane establish steady funding.....

Got Jane on the American lecture circuit....

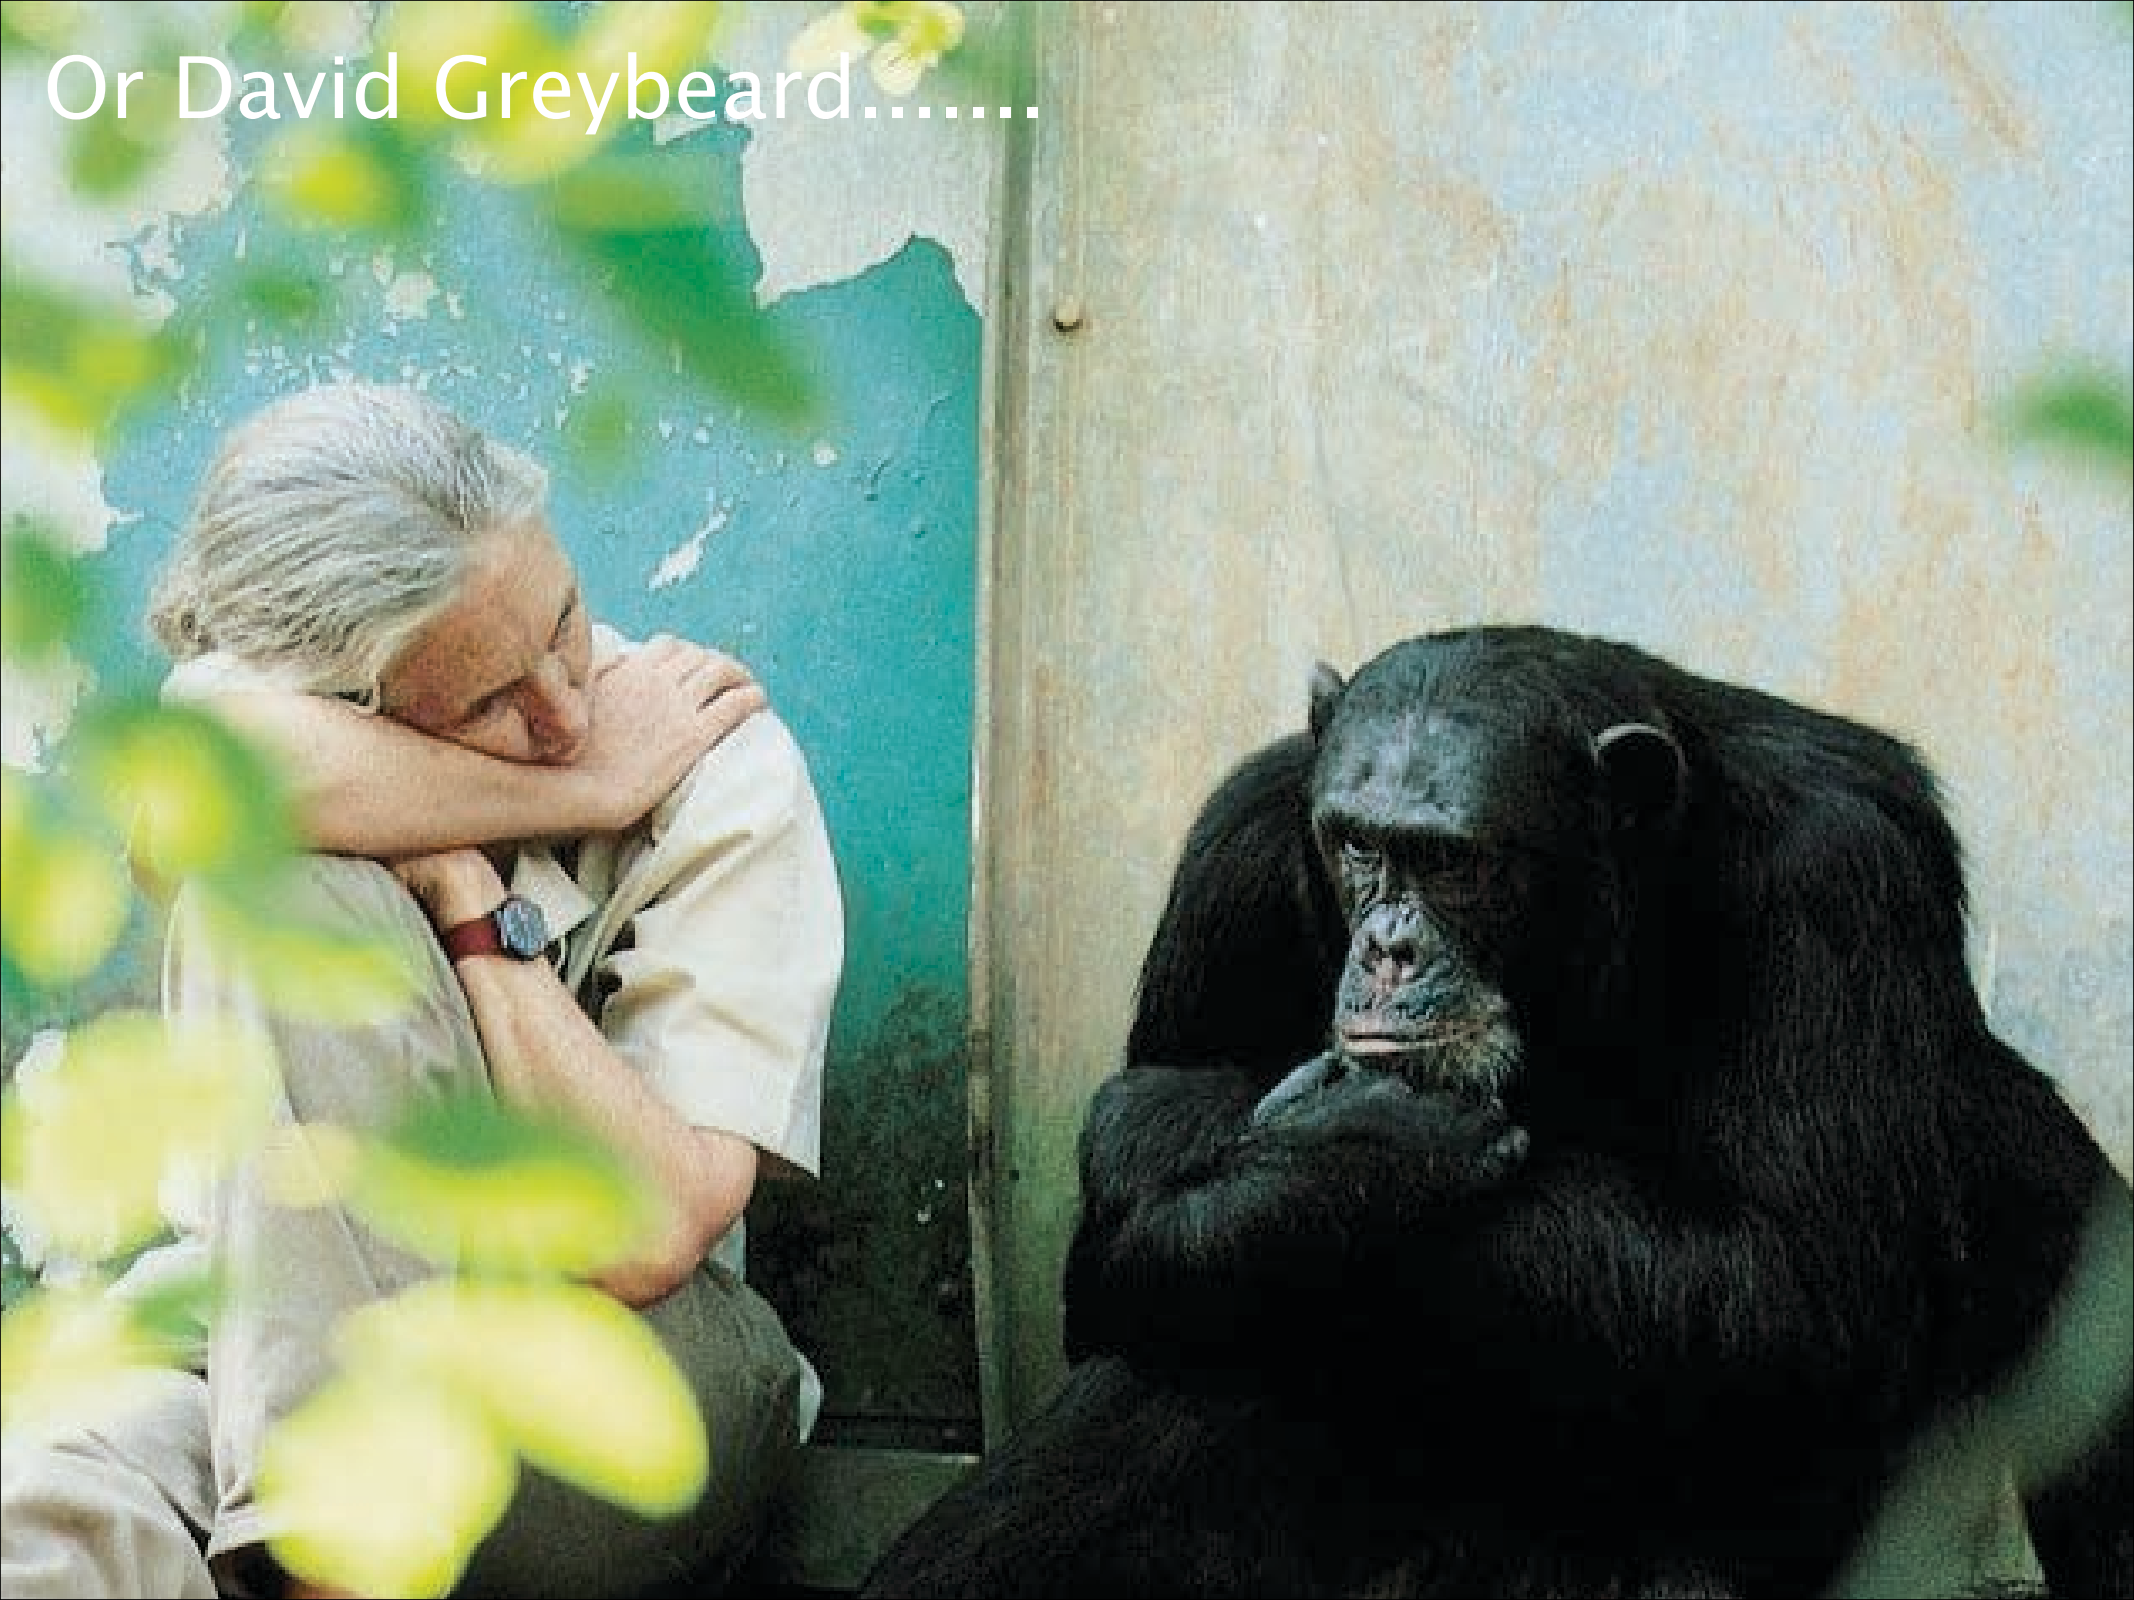

Got Stanford behind Jane's work.

Let's not forget Rusty....

Or David Greybeard.....

Definitely not herbivores.....

Everyone, this is Jane.....

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

The image shows the front cover of a National Geographic magazine from 1962. The cover features a photograph of Jane Goodall, a young woman with blonde hair, sitting in a lush green environment and writing in a notebook. The magazine's title, 'NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC', is prominently displayed at the top in large, white, serif capital letters. Below the title, there are four article teasers, each with a title and a byline. The cover is framed by a decorative border with a repeating floral pattern. The overall color scheme is dominated by the greens of the foliage and the yellow of the magazine's spine on the left.
